

The Implications of God Creating Light

God Created Light

Then God said, "Let there be light"; and there was light. (Gen 1:3)

Implication

God only created light once and therefore He would have created it with the same properties that it has today, including its speed.

God Created the Sun and Moon

Then God said, "Let there be lights in the expanse of the heavens to separate the day from the night, and let them be for signs and for seasons and for days and years; and let them be for lights in the expanse of the heavens to give light on the earth"; and it was so. God made the two great lights, the greater light to govern the day, and the lesser light to govern the night; (Gen 1:14-16a)

Implication

From the beginning of creation the two purposes of the sun and moon were "to separate the day from the night" (Gen 1:14,17) and to govern the regularity of "seasons, days, and years" (Gen 1:14). Since these functions of the sun and moon have remained constant from creation, the clear implication is that the speed of light has also remained constant since creation.

God Also Created the Stars

He made the stars also. God placed them in the expanse of the heavens to give light on the earth, (Gen 1:16b-17)

Implication

The fact that God placed the sun, moon, and stars in the heavens "to give light on the earth" (Gen 1:17) indicates clearly that the light from the sun, the moon, and the stars was emitted by that heavenly luminary and traveled from it to the earth. This contradicts the suggestion that the God created the light from the stars in transit, giving the stars the appearance of age. That suggestion makes God a deceiver and it is Satan who is the deceiver (Rev 12:9). If the universe is approximately 7,000 years old, there should be no stars visible that more than are 7,000 years old. Since the stars did fulfill God's purpose "to give light on the earth" (Gen 1:16-17), they do reveal the true age of the universe created by the God of truth.
